Critical and Creative Teaching in Response to the COVID-19 Crisis

A series of free webinars for K-12 educators

Tuesdays | 4:00 to 5:00 PM EST

8 Sessions, April 21 to June 8, 2020

Via Zoom Video Conferencing, Up to 100 Participants

In these unique and unprecedented times, K-12 educators are being tasked with providing experiences for their students that range from "enrichment" activities to fully online, synchronous learning sessions. As we all work through a design and development phase of flexible learning options, we hope to share knowledge, insights, and activities that could be useful for other educators.

This series of weekly webinars will be offered as live, synchronous one-hour Zoom sessions on Tuesdays at 4:00 PM EST, and will be archived for later viewing. Teacher consultants leading these sessions are, like you, working under "stay home, stay safe" orders and are working to engage students in meaningful learning activities.

We will participate in activities together, as learners, and have time for questions, conversation, and planning next steps in your own teaching context. Recognizing the challenges of remote learning, we will address strategies for supporting students' socio-emotional health, our own struggles with the abrupt end of the school year, and other concerns that continue to emerge during the COVID-19 pandemic.

More than just "moving online," these sessions are designed to provide interactive, web-based learning opportunities, so active participation during the scheduled sessions is encouraged through webcams and microphones.

Teachers leading these session are donating their time, talent, and expertise, and look forward to learning with you. These sessions are being offered free, yet in order to participate live, in Zoom, RSVPs are required.
